

may

every night when I walk through the little gate a low-hung branch of apricot blossoms smacks me in the face : you ditched me faster and after more effulgent avowals than I even dreamt was possible : now there's pollen in my mouth and redolent white scent stinging my nose : and a long wet scratch reaching from my cheekbone up to my eye